

2 cases of legionnaires at Hampden senior home

Patients recovering

Keswick Multi-Care using only bottled water while investigation is under way

November 07, 2011 | By Andrea K. Walker and Timothy B. Wheeler, The Baltimore Sun

Baltimore city health officials have confirmed two cases of legionnaires disease at a Hampden nursing home.

The two people diagnosed with the disease at the Keswick Multi-Care Center on West 40th Street began showing symptoms in September but are recovering, according to Brian Schleiter, a spokesman with the Baltimore Health Department. The center is taking precautions by serving only bottled water while an investigation is under way.